Bank tellers, also known as cashiers, deal directly with the bank's clients. A post-secondary education is a requirement for a bank teller position, that's why high school graduates are usually hired by banks and financial institutions. On the other hand, this job requires performing tasks accurately, because it involves processing high amounts of money, recording financial transactions such as withdrawals, cashing checks etc. They also promote bank's services and products, answer customer's queries and resolve amicably any complaints.

After writing a bank teller resume, we recommend you to follow these pieces of advices in order to start a successful job search:

- List your educational qualifications (bachelor's degree in accounting or other related field.)
- Highlight your strong math, problem-solving and quick-thinking skills.
- Mention your professional achievements and your previous job experiences.
