Check your company/governmental agency specific requirements to determine your need to indicate a “reportable contact”. Below is an example from the United States.

US DOE EXAMPLE: CONTACTS WITH INDIVIDUALS OR ORGANIZATIONS FROM SENSITIVE COUNTRIES

The United States Department of Energy (DOE) requires all employees and contractors to report unofficial contacts with individuals from sensitive countries. Reporting such contacts to other government agencies does not satisfy DOE requirements for notification. Do report:

- Unofficial contacts within or outside the U. S. (social, personal, or other unreported professional settings, such as conferences, where there is significant contact).
- Any attempted elicitation of information or contact (official or unofficial that would indicate a foreign intelligence presence). Any contact involving inappropriate efforts to obtain information about a sensitive subject, classified information, or any counterintelligence-related incidents. This may include perceived efforts to obtain sensitive or proprietary data.
- Any contact via telephone, facsimile machine, e-mail, Internet, or other electronic means (usually only the initial contact, official or unofficial).
- Anomalies—foreign power activity or knowledge, inconsistent with the expected norm, that suggests foreign knowledge of U. S. national security information, processes or capabilities.
- Report contacts as soon as possible after occurrence to the CIO. You are not required to notify DOE of "trivial" contacts, such as brief conversations not involving significant content. Contacts included in trip reports need not be reported separately unless there is a concern.

If you have any questions about what constitutes a reportable contact or about the sensitivity of a specific country (the sensitive country list continually changes) contact your specific internal organization.
