

A career making a difference.

The Job: Return-to-work specialist — nurse

You'll partner with workers, employers, health care providers, and others to help people who were injured at work return to work safely and regain quality of life.

The difference:

Helping injured workers return to work safely

Is this job a good fit for you?

We're looking for people who can:

- Develop, implement, and monitor return-to-work plans that bridge the gap between an individual's functional abilities and job requirements
- Visit worksites to assess job demands
- Meet with health care providers and others to assist in the development of injury management plans
- Weigh evidence and interpret policy to determine workers' eligibility for benefits
- Develop supportive and respectful relationships
- Make decisions about diagnostic referrals and consultations
- Assist injured workers with clinical needs, hospital discharge planning, and home care arrangements
- Educate workers, worker representative groups, employers, industry groups, and health care providers about disability management and return-to-work strategies

Your background and experience:

- In good standing with the College of Registered Nurses of British Columbia and have a current licence to practice in B.C.
- A BSc in nursing and a post-RN qualification in occupational health or community health are preferred
- A minimum of five years of experience as a registered nurse, preferably in a community setting
- Demonstrated knowledge of occupational health and safety and disability management activities including return-to-work planning
- Valid driver's licence
